THE INDIANS.

BY MRS. SIOUXNEY.

"How can the Red Men be forgotten, when the mountains, lakes, and rivers in the United State bear their names?"

Ye say that all have passed away,
That noble race and brave;
Their light canoes have vanished From off the created wave:
That mid the forests where they roamed There rings no hunter's shout;
But their name is on your waves, Ye may not wash it out.

Yes, where Ontario's billow Like ocean's surge is curled, Where strong Niagara's thunder wake The echo of the world;
Where red Missouri bringeth Rich tribute from the West, And the Rappahannock sweetly sleeps On green Virginia's breast.

Ye say their come like cabins,
That clustered o'er the vale, Have disappeared as withered leaves Before the autumn gale;
But their memory liveth on your hills,
Their baptism on your shore,
Your ever-living rivers speak Their dialect of yore.

Old Massachussets wears it Upon her hoary crown;
And broad Ohio bears it Amid his young renown, Connecticut hath wreathed it Whence his quiet foliage waves And bold Kentucky breathes it Through all his ancient caves.

Wachusetts hides its lingering voice Within his rocky lee;
And the Allegheny bears the tone Throughout his lofty chert; Montaduch on his forehead bears Death's seal that sacred trust:
Your mountains build their monuments, Though ye give the winds their dust.

Ye deem them red-brown brethren The insects of an hour; Forgotten or despised, amid The regions of their power, Ye drive them from their fathers' lands, Ye break of faith the seal;
But can ye from the court of Heaven Exclude their last appeal?

Ye see their unassuming tribes,
With toil worn steps and slow, Onward thro' trackless deserts press,
A caravan of woe.
Think ye the Eternal ear is deaf—His sleepless vision dim?
Think ye the soul's blood may not cry From that far land to His?

ANXIETIES AND DISQUIETUDES OF LIFE.

I know of no one, nor have I ever known a person entirely free from anxiety and care.
If we form a resolution in the morning, however decided we may be, in our own minds to abide by it, through the succeeding day, it nevertheless is altogether probable, that some unexpected occurrence, or some unlooked for incident, may in a few hours, throw us off from our guard, and involve us in the same perplexities and anxieties as ever. Human nature is the same at all times, and in all circumstances, easily moved and impressed with the objects around us; and our feelings readily participate in the excitements and agitations that are continually arising from the changeable condition of this fleeting and treacherous world. Man himself is subject to change, in his plans and purposes, either from voluntary choice, or from inevitable obstacles and events, beyond his control. Anxiety and care seem interwoven, and closely together with the human condition, in every clime, and among all classes and ranks; although we are apt to imagine, on a transient view, that some classes of men, and some conditions in life, are more exempt from them than others, yet on a closer examination, we shall generally find, to our satisfaction, that there are in fact the same disquietudes at heart, the same perplexities, and the same anxieties pervading the great mass of mankind, from the crown sparkling with diamonds to the beggar who lives on charity.

The peasant might be one of the happiest of men, in the midst of his rural occupations and plenty, free from the competitions and enquiries that agitate and disturb the higher orders of society, if he did not partake of that same propensity, to have or enjoy something more, or greater than what he already possesses, and to emulate some one whom he supposes, is going ahead of him, either in wealth, or reputation, or learning; thus, we shall find, that even those who might be happy, or a great deal happier than they are, instinctively, as it were, dash the golden cup from their very lips, to seek for a greater draught, when they had amply sufficient for the demands of nature and reason, within their grasp. Such being our state and nature; is it not the inference indisputable, that unmixt happiness was never intended by our Creator to be the lot and accompaniment of man in this world: but that while he seeks his happiness here only, he will be always tost on the waves of uncertainty and anxious suspense, without ever finding any solid foundation on which to rest his hopes and his heart. It is astonishing, how sometimes, the most trivial incident, or circumstance, will kindle a flame of conflagration through our whole system, and throw it in the most violent agitation and intense anxiety; and when we look back on the storm and fury, that have now spent their force and violence, we are surprised at the inadequacy of the cause, that ruffled the equanimity and tranquillity of our minds, and raised such commotion within.

A disrespectful word, or expression, an impudent look, or unmannerly conduct, from a neighbor, friend, or fellow citizen, may in a moment, discompose our accustomed calmness and balance of mind, and swell our bosoms with a temporary transport of resentment, or disgust towards the person, who had so indecently and grossly offended our feelings, and transgressed the rules of good breeding and friendship.

And, among those we love most, on earth, how often some little incident, beyond our control, will cause discontent and disquietude in our domestic circles, and a transient alienation of heart towards those, perhaps, who are highest in our esteem and affection.

Hence, we may learn, to our heart's content, not to expect perfection and infallibility in ourselves and others; but to moderate our expectations, and learn, without repining, to practice patience and forbearance under ills and insults, and accustom ourselves to habits of self-denial and meekness, and to exercise a charitable and forgiving spirit and temper toward our fellow men, in their faults and foibles; and this is the only course to secure the little peace and happiness that this world is capable of, as well as to afford examples to others, that may be useful in promoting domestic peace, and universal harmony.

From the Portland Transcript.

CONGRESSIONAL DIGNITY.—We had often heard of the dignity of the American Congressmen, some few years ago, we witnessed its doings.
We recollect first visiting the Senate chamber, and the dignified decorum that characterized its deliberations fully realized our expectations.
The grave courtesy that prevailed among the Senators—the attention given to the subjects discussed—the earnestness manifested in the performance of duty, evinced to us that the members of this branch of the national government were adequately impressed with the importance of their station, as legislators of the American people. We left the chamber pleased with our observations—our anticipations quite, on the whole, satisfied. We then visited the Hall of Representatives. But what is this?
Is the House just assembling, or is it on the point of adjourning? The members are all in a bustle, some sitting, some talking, some waiting among the desks, all with their hats on.
We are too late, thought we, to-day. No—amid the confusion a voice is faintly heard.— It is a member addressing the House. The House? Is such a rabble the "congregated wisdom" of the United States? Where is the dignity—the lofty sense of decorum—the grave deliberations we had looked for? A village debating club would put all to the blush. At the time of which we are speaking the House had not been deserted as of late. We saw then no blows given and received—we saw no member flogged—we saw no bruised eyes and bloody noses—we heard no vulgar, obscene blackguardism—no charges of falsehood—no unkindness. All this has been left for a later day. From all we can learn, the House must have been the pink of decorum compared with its present condition. The late session seems to have been one continued scene of brawl, that would have disgraced a pot-house. Even to the very last moment the condition of the members was in keeping. The last act of the legislative drama, was a regular knock down, and this on a Sunday morning, too, between a Mr.
Campbell and Mr. Maury, who disgraced the State of Tennessee by being her representatives.
—Instead of being a theatre for manly, noble strife—for lofty, intellectual warfare—the hall of Congress has been reduced to a very Cockpit—a gladiatorial arena for pugilistic combats.
It is sickening to reflect upon this subject—to be obliged to record such disgusting facts; but they stare us too boldly in the face to pass them by. And is there no remedy for this evil?
For the safety—not to say honor, of our country we trust so. It lies with the people. Send men to Congress of sterling moral principle, men who are governed by some other than mere party considerations. We are sacrificing our dearest interests to party. We look not to the man—every thing is absorbed in the partisan.
We ask not, is his moral character good? but will he vote with us? If so, no matter if he be a drunkard, a gambler, an ignorant, a saint, a violator of all law and all decency, a saint, or a devil, he is the one for us? Alas, when such are the motives that govern us in the selection of our lawgivers, have we not reason, to much reason to fear for the safety of our institutions.

MANNERS IN MISSOURI.—A member elect of the lower chamber of the Legislature of this State, was last year persuaded by some ways of his neighborhood, that if he did not reach the State House at 10 o'clock on the day of Assembling, he could not be sworn, and would lose his seat. He immediately mounted, with hunting frock, rifle and bowie knife, and spurred till he got to the door of the State House, where he hitched his nag. A crowd were in the chamber in the lower house on the ground floor walking about with their hats on and smoking cigars.—These he passed, ran up stairs into the Senate chamber, set his rifle against the wall, and bawled out, "Strangers, where's the man that swears me in?" at the same time taking out his credentials. "Walk this way," said the clerk, who was at the moment igniting a real Principle, and he was sworn without inquiry. When the teller came to count noses he found there was one Senator too many present; the mistake was soon discovered, and the huntsman was informed that he did not belong there. "Fool who! with your corn bread?" he roared. You can't flunk this child no how you can fix it. I'm elected to this here Legislature, and I'll go again all banks and eternal improvements, and if there's any of your oratory gentlemen wants to be skinned, just say the word, and I'll light upon you like a nigger on a wood-chuck. My constituents sent me here, and if you want to floor this two legged animal, hop on, just as soon as you like, for though I'm from the back country I'm a little smarter than any other quadruped you can turn out of this drove." After this admirable harangue, he put his bowie knife between his teeth, and took up his rifle with, "Come here, old Suke, stand by me!" at the same time presenting it at the chairman, who however, had seen such people.
After some expostulation, the man was persuaded that he belonged to the lower chamber, upon which he sheathed his knife, flung his gun on his shoulder, and with a profound conge, remarked, "Gentlemen, I beg your pardon.— But if I didn't think that are lower room was the groggery, may I be shot."

WESTERN LIFE.—A mason recently located at Lyons, Illinois, writes, to a friend in this city, in this wise, under date of June, 1838: At the stage house where these fearful inscriptions placarded on the walls: "No Michigan money received here for stage fare!" Scarce a farmer in the state but had his pockets burnt more or less by bills of the unchartered banks of the State of Michigan, a great majority of which, it is the general opinion, will never be worth one fraction to the bill holders. The unhappy exposed by the Bank Commissioners, of the glass and nales composing their specie, put the 'grand finale' to their credit, and even the bills of the old chartered banks could be bought in towns on the Illinois river for 25 cents on a dollar. The three degrees of that money are as follows: 1st. Bank of the city of Detroit, called 'Red dog.' 2d. Chartered banks in the country, 'Wild Cat,' 3d. Banks instituted under the general banking law, 'Catamount.' The stage stopped on the road to take in a passenger who handed John a bill, which was instantly returned, accompanied by the phrase, 'Don't take red dog?' 'No?' ejaculated the other, 'Why, that are kind o' money, they tell me, is just as good as the specie and lighter to carry.' 'It may be lighter to carry?' What other money've you got?' 'Nothing but wild cat and catamount.' 'O! Here's two bills that rank next to old gold—the 'Bank of Cold Water,' and the 'Bank of Sandstone.' 'Shan't take 'em—they're catamount!' 'Then I'll foot it. I took all o' this for good money, and it's got to go! You may drive on, Abombligue—sorry you don't know your interest!' We now assended a rolling piece of ground, our team proceeding leisurely along to balance the trouble of hauling through a swampy lot, when we were hailed by a 'genuine Illinois Sucker,' who wished a passage to Chicago. 'I can pay you,' said he to our coachman, 'in money that is money, and no shavie about it. Now here's so' thing that's as scarce as woods hereabout; (reads) the 'Bank of Lapeer'—private property holden—security on real estate to three times the amount—besides forty wa-lots—' Driver: 'In Lake Michigan?' Sucker: 'Darn it, no—take it to be mill streams!' Their specie aint glass and nails, I'll bet a hog! This here money is kalkulated for two lay by! No tucking off this description of currency for goods now-a-days—I paid a premium for't!
But as I ain't got no other kind I'll let it go at par—thought it rubs agin the grain!' Driver: '(drily) 'Lapeer is down?' Sucker: 'you don't! Why, I meant to deposite in that bank —you see the malicious rumors got about without any bottom—now I ain't no doubt that they have more specie than bills, and I'm confident they don't owe nothin.' Here's a V, and I'll take the change in large silver; they don't send eight ten-cent pieces for a dollar in Bu-falo—it takes two cents and a half more to make a shilling there—half dollars are about as convenient as any thing.' Driver: (whipping up the team) 'Ah, you needn't trouble yourself about getting on to that stage—we're rather full, and 'Tim Snapper ain't to be taken in by wild cat!'

FERTILE LANDS.—Much is said about the fertility of the soil of Illinois, Michigan, and other Western States; but we see little use in having richer soil than some of the lands on the Merrimack. Assiduous cultivation is all that is necessary to make it pour out its bounties in rich profusion. If weeds grow there faster than here, we should not know what to do with them.
We actually found, one day this week, a weed, 2 feet 7 inches long, and three-fourths of an inch through at the butt, where the ground was hoed clean ten days before! We saw a field of oats, a few days ago, which were so rank that they could not stand alone, and had lain down to rest. Our marrowfat Peas grow eight or ten feet high, and it would take a two bushel basket to cover a hill of our Beans. Verily, we see no use in having a soil richer than ours is with proper cultivation; and as to climate, the whole world may be challenged to produce a finer season than the present, in all the New England States.— Essex Gazette.

GRASS CROP. Our farmers have begun to cut their grass. There is an abundant crop, and but little stock to eat. Hay will consequently be cheap and stock high, during the coming fall and winter. Me. Farmer.

The Crops.—A gentleman who visited a few days ago, the fertile regions of the Edenston district, informs us that the wheat, which was never better or more abundant, has all been safely harvested; and that the Indian corn crop surpasses all that he has ever seen, in the luxuriance of its growth. Norfolk Herald.

Maryland Crops.—The Annapolis Republican of the 3d instant says—The Farmers are commencing harvesting. A glorious prospect of kind old mother earth they have before them.

PRETENDED FAILURE OF THE WHEAT CROP.—Some speculator has published an article in the New York Journal of Commerce in which he tells a mournful story of failure in the wheat crop in the West. The fly, the rust, the weevil, and all the plagues of Egypt have been at work to destroy the crop. There was not so much sown—the heads are short—they are not half filled, &c. &c. &c. The plain English of it is,—keep flour up to eight or ten dollars per barrel as long as possible.]

From the Maine Democrat.

Republicans of York-Republicans of Maine —awake!!—I have before alluded to the nightly efforts that were made by the toxy-whigs, to get up a great Convention at Alfred on the 11th. Deputy Sheriffs, and special runners were driving to and fro in all parts of the county for weeks. Money was lavished with no sparring hand, seats paid for, horses and carriages provided free of expense, bargains were made that 75 from one town, 50 from another, 20 from another, and so on, should be brought to the convention; but alas, the whole number that could be got there was about 4 or 500—including boys and strangers—composed principally of federal lawyers—Deputy Sheriffs—Land Speculators and hungry expectants—but few of the laboring, producing classes of people were seen in their train. How different was the vast collection of intelligent countenances and hard hands that spontaneously assembled there on the 4th of July,—and how different the object! One to misrepresent and slander the administration at Washington, and perpetuate if possible the second Huntoon dynasty, and present reign of terror upon the people of Maine; the other, asking equality of rights, appealing to the truth, and the patriotism and firmness of the people in support of their cause.

Awake, Citizens!!—The object of your opponents is to perpetuate their power. Their cries of distress are for political purposes. Not one in twenty of them calculate on living by their own industry. Their duplicity and double dealing is apparent in every utterance, every act. The toxy-whigs of Maine fear to trust the people to manage their own affairs in their own way. They would place the independent yeomanry under guardianship, to themselves.
They watch the movements of every laboring man whose vote they hope to control—but they greatly mistake the intelligence and underrate the virtues of that worthy class of our citizens, if they expect to secure them by invitations to suppers and fiddlings. The object is understood and the artifice despised. The spirit of avarice is predominant in all their acts. They blow hot or blow cold as best suits their purposes. Let none mislead you; the laborer is worthy of his hire, and the shameless trafficking wretch that would attempt to control your vote, is himself unworthy of a grave in the soil of freedom.

Never was there a more complete failure than the federal convention at Alfred last week.— Never were such efforts before made in this State to get up a convention respectable for its numbers; but the people were not there. They could not be wheedled, coaxed or driven to attend; with few exceptions it was a train in if living, under the act of 7th June.

the leading strings of a monied junco. Many of them involved in debt, speculations from which they can never be extricated, Sheriffs and dandies—living upon the labor of others; and their love for the dear people is precisely that of the lion for the lamb on which he feeds and fatens.

Republicans, Awake!!—Earth and heaven will be invoked by your opponents to sustain themselves in power. Their whole thirst is for money and office. In the nomination of Mr.
FAIRFIELD, for Governor, you have every thing to hope for. Do your duty and the victory is won. His nomination is responded to with honest pride and satisfaction by all classes of the Democracy of Maine. He is remembered by many of our hardy seamen and fishermen as the active, intelligent boy, before the mast, always cheerful, and always at his post.
He sprung from the people, and is himself a working man—his sympathies and affections are with them. His honorable career, his industry and perseverance are well known to the people of this county. His style of living is plain and simple; all classes can approach him.
Unlike his opponent he has no gaudy equipage, no splendid palace, and unlike him prefers the comforts of a private life to any office in the power of the people to give.

Citizens, Awake!!—The crisis is an important one. The signs are portentous—let no man mislead you. The failure of the federal meeting at Alfred augurs well for the cause of Democracy. Harken not to their slanders and ravings. "If the government has been embarrassed it has been effected by the actions of the banks, and our opponents are the sole authors of the mischief." The government which they tauntingly and falsely denounce as bankrupt, has at this moment more than forty-five millions of dollars due on merchant's bonds, bank deposits and State loans,—six millions of which is due from the Bank of the United States, and five from other Banks. With this fact staring them in the face what confidence can be placed in their assertions?

Awake, Citizens!!—Gird on your armor.— If the democracy of Maine is of humble origin, when aroused, it is not of a man fearing spirit.
They love freedom more than they love wealth.
They value the right of suffrage higher than they value rides and invitations to dinners, suppers and fiddlings. It is in vain for those who live in luxury on the productiveness of others, to pretend that all have the same interest—so have said the purse proud and haughty of despotic governments in all ages of the world.

Mr FAIRFIELD is identified with the people.
He is pledged to no interest but the interest of the whole, and is alike the rich and the poor man's friend. The contest will be one of deep interest. The war is just beginning. On one side will be the democracy of Maine, the middle interest, and great producing classes. On the other, with few honorable exceptions, will be found all those who, from fear or otherwise, are in the leading strings of the rich—those who live in idleness on the interest of their money —and all such as live on the labor of others.— The result cannot be doubtful. Let every friend awake and do his duty. The patriot's course is one unflinching fidelity—the patriot's reward is to him and to him only who is steadfast, and firm to the end.

SPIRIT OF '76.

From the Portland Advertiser.

Messrs. Editors.—It has been intimated to me that the "Boxbury Bank" in Massachusetts, has agents scattered about the country for the purpose of putting its bills into circulation,— which I believe has already been done to a great extent.

The charter of this Bank has been declared void by the Legislature of Massachusetts, as I have been told—and if this be the case, the public ought to be cautioned against taking its bills.

AFFECTING COINCIDENCE. Among the passengers lost on board the Pulaski, was Mr.
Samuel Livermore, a young gentleman of great promise son of Judge Livermore, of Holderness in this State. The news reached his afflicted father during the past week; and while the messenger was giving an account of that fatal disaster,—another came in and announced that the school house, at a little distance, had just been struck by lightning and out of 40 scholars within, one only was killed; but that one was also a young son of Judge L. The scene may be imagined, but cannot be described.

Portsmouth (Pa.) Jour.

We are happy to learn that the attention of Congress is called to the subject of steamboats.
Something ought speedily to be done to put a stop to the wholesale murders, which are sweeping off the human race, with a fearful rapidity.

Widows of Revolutionary Pensioners.—A late law of Congress provides, that the widows of those who were in the revolutionary army, and who were married before 1794, and are now widows shall receive a pension for five years from March 4th, 1836, equal to the pay to which the husband would have been entitled, if living, under the act of 7th June.

POLITICAL.

At a meeting of Republican members of the Senate and House of Representatives held at the Capitol, July 6, 1838, the Hon. JOHN M. NILES, of Connecticut, and the Hon. CHARLES E. HAYNES, of Georgia, being Chairman, and the Hon. GEORGE M. KEIM, of Pennsylvania, and the Hon. H. L. TURNER, of Tennessee, acting as Secretaries, the Address to the People of the United States was received, and further considered; whereupon, on motion of the Hon. Hiram Gray, of New York, it was.

Resolved, That the address be signed and published by the committee who have prepared it in behalf of the Republican members of Congress.

JOHN M. NILES, and CHARLES E. HAYNES, } Chairmen.
Geo. M. Keim, and Hopkins L. Turner, } Secretaries.
ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

In a country advancing with the rapidity of ours, great changes, having a powerful control over its political relations and future destiny, must not unfrequently occur, which may make it the duty of those intrusted, for the time, with the management of public affairs, in order to avoid misapprehension, to publish an exposition of their principles and purposes. Such are the changes which have taken place within the last few years, and which have already had great effect on the political condition of the country, are destined still to have much greater hereafter. Among these may be enumerated the final payment of the public debt; the expiration of the charter of the United States Bank, without renewal; the rise and progress of abolition; and finally the stoppage of payment by the banks, with the consequent embarrassment to the community, and in the fiscal action of the Government. Never, in so short a period, since the commencement of the Government, have so many events, destined to effect so mighty a change in our political condition, occurred. That their first effect would be to unsettle public opinion was to be expected; and accordingly there never was a time, when the political elements of the country were in a state of greater confusion, and when it was more important that those who are intrusted with the management of public affairs, should recur to first principles, and give a full and explicit exposition of their views.

Actuated by these considerations, the Republican members of Congress, about to return to their constituents, propose to lay before them a brief exposition of the principles by which they have been guided, and intend hereafter to be governed, on some of the most important measures of public policy acted on, and to be acted on in the councils of the General Government.

We are deeply sensible that too much has been expected from the deliberations of Congress. A numerous and powerful party has induced a large portion of the people to look alone to the Congress of the United States for relief. They are taught to believe that from thence alone can emanate the measures required to restore the country to peace, quiet, and happiness, unmindful that we have a written Constitution to control those who administer the various departments of the General Government. Many appear to think that Congress can do any and every thing called for in this novel crisis in the affairs of the country. To guard against the further progress of this fatal delusion, and to exonerate ourselves from unreasonable responsibility, we propose, at the threshold of this address, to present a concise history, touching the character of the federal Constitution, and the origin of the two great political parties which have divided, and will probably forever divide, the American people.

There were radical differences of opinion in the convention which formed the Constitution. They laid the foundation of those parties which have at intervals ever since agitated, and at this moment deeply agitate, the whole country.

A portion of the convention, from a strong partiality for the British form of Government, desired to approximate as near that system as public opinion in America would allow. From them came propositions for a President and Senate for life, elections for long terms, and other fundamental arrangements, which should remove the Government as far as possible from popular control. Another portion, having more confidence in the intelligence and virtue of the people, advocated the principle of making the executive and legislative branches elective for short terms. After the Constitution was formed, those two parties differed widely in the views they took of the tendency of the Government; the one believing that it was towards consolidation, and the other to disunion, and the one accordingly believing that the danger was despotism in the head, and the other anarchy in the members. Hence the different light in which the two parties viewed the character of the system. The Republican party held it to be federative in its character, and formed by the States in their sovereign capacity, and adopted for their mutual security and happiness, while many of their adversaries regarded it as a great national Republic, formed by the American people in the aggregate, to promote the interest of the majority instead of the several States composing it.

When the Government was put in operation under the new Constitution, each party adopted rules of construction calculated to secure their peculiar objects, and advance their cherished principles, in its practical operation.

Unfortunately, the execution of certain vital parts of the system was entrusted to men who had no faith in its stability, without essential changes, removing it further from the influence of the people and the States, and they immediately set themselves to work to accomplish, by a broad construction that which was, in their opinion, essential to the continued existence of the Government, but was unattainable through a direct appeal to the States and people for amendments to the Constitution. Out of this design grew the funding system of the first Secretary of the Treasury, and other measures intended to create an improper action of the Government.

The other party maintaining their faith in the Constitution as it is, insisted that the Constitution should be construed strictly, according to its honest meaning as adopted by the States; and that changes in the system, when found necessary, should be sought through applications for amendments, rather than through new, vague and multitudinous constructions which, in effect, would accumulate unlimited powers in a Government notoriously limited by those who had created it. The rapid and resolute encroachments of a few years greatly alarmed and roused to energetic action the friends of a limited, pure Government, controlled by the public will. They organized themselves for constitutional resistance, proportioned to the character and extent of actual and threatened usurpations, and threw out, from the ablest pens of that day, luminous expositions of the real origin, true character, and ultimate objects of our Constitution. After a fearful struggle, success crowned their efforts; the Government was wrested from the hands of those whose principles were monarchical and aristocratical; the letter of the Constitution, and the honest meaning of those who adopted it, became the practical rule of construction; and public opinion, expressed by the unbiased representatives of the people and the States, through the different branches of the Government, was recognised as the only legitimate governing power.

We adhere to the constitutional doctrines of the Republican party of 1798-9; we adopt the rule of strict construction they maintained, as the only true and safe one, applicable to our Constitution; we reject the assumption that the people have not the requisite intelligence and virtue to choose competent managers of public affairs, and direct them when necessary.

These are the principles upon which we would have our Government administered, and a reference to our views upon the great and agitating topics of the day will, we trust show that we are disposed to carry these principles into practice by our public acts.

The leading question which now divides the two parties of the country is, the re-establishment of a Bank of the United States. The first bank was a measure of that party, which deemed it necessary to devise other means than public opinion and the suffrages of the people, to secure a stable Government. It was condemned by the people, and was required to wind up, after living out its chartered existence. Far different were the considerations which led to the establishment of a second bank. It was thought to be necessary, perhaps from conclusions too hastily drawn, as an instrument to compel the State banks to resume specie payments; and as a fiscal agent, to keep and transfer the funds of the United States. This bank was also condemned by the people, and its charter suffered to expire without renewal. The question is, shall we have a third bank, after two have been established by the public authorities, and condemned by the people? There are many of us who have always believed a Bank of the United States to be unconstitutional. They look upon the power to create corporations, except in and for the District of Columbia, as a substantive power reserved wholly to the States. They find that the convention which formed the Constitution, refused to insert clauses delegating to Congress the general power to create corporations. In the discussions of the friends and foes of the Constitution, through the press of the country, and in the State conventions prior to its adoption, they do not find it alleged on either side, that it conferred such a power on Congress. They think that the absence of any grant of power in the Constitution ought, itself, to be conclusive; but when, in addition to this, it has been proved by the developments of late years that the proposition was actually voted down in convention, and that both parties were thenceforward silent on the subject; it seems to them impossible to doubt that the power was not granted, but was purposely withheld.

They believe that Congress has no constitutional power to regulate credit in any of the States; that the right of each citizen, and of any association of citizens, to use their credit, is derived originally from the laws, but is an incident to property in the social state; that the citizens of the States possessed it in the most plenary manner; and that each or any of them, singly or associated, could issue their notes, without limitation, until the right was taken away by the laws of the States against private banking; that, to restore the right, nothing is necessary but the repeal of those laws; and that the granting of bank charters is but a restoration of the right to the favored individuals, in a modified form. They maintain that the General Government, having had no agency of right, or in fact, in restraining the use of credit, or forbidding private banking within the States, has no power to restore the right, in either a general or modified form, the power belonging exclusively to the States which took it away. And they think Congress has as rightful power to abrogate all the State laws against banking, and restore the right to every citizen without restraint, as they have to restore it in a qualified shape under the conditions of a bank charter.

These, and many other arguments of great force, may be employed to prove the unconstitutionality of a Bank of the United States. But whatever may have been, or are now, our several conclusions upon that point, we unanimously concur in the opinion that the re-establishment of a Bank of the United States is unnecessary, inexpedient, and dangerous to the public liberty.

A few years' experience has given much additional force to the arguments originally urged against such an institution. A leading argument in favor of it is that the State banks, of themselves, are incompetent to manage their affairs prudently, or to maintain specie payments and preserve a sound currency; and that a Bank of the United States is necessary to check and control them. Do those who use this argument reflect that it is an argument against popular government itself? The people constitute the governing power in the United States, and it is by their authority that the State banks are created. This argument assumes that the people are incompetent to check and control a class of institutions which they create, and that a new agent, unknown to the States and irresponsible to them or to the people, must be introduced, to save them from the disastrous consequences of their own acts.

Is this a Republican doctrine? On the contrary, is it not the leading argument in favor of monopoly and absolute power throughout the world? Why do kings reign, and princes exercise absolute dominion, but because the people are assumed to be incompetent to act wisely and protect themselves against the evil consequences of their own ignorance and error?

Assume that the State Banks are incompetent to the ends for which they are created, and will necessarily run into periodical excesses entailing great evils upon the country, to what source would a Republican look for a remedy? Would he say that the people cannot be trusted to amend their own institutions, and that we must have an irresponsible corporation to prevent these evils? Would he not rather justly conclude that the banking system itself was defective, and undertake to reform it, so as to bring it under the control of the people, through their constitutional organs, rather than to assume that it cannot be regulated otherwise than by the introduction of a power competent to contend for mastery with the Government itself?

We reject both the premises and the conclusions. We believe our representative and popular Governments in the States, who created these institutions, fully competent to modify and reform them, and to impose all those checks and restraints upon them which the banking system is capable of receiving.

To awaken the people to a due sense of the magnitude of that power which the advocates of a Bank of the United States would create, let us look at the amount in "men and money" which they propose to make dependent upon one institution.

The number of State banks and branches now, is 529. The number of president, directors, and other officers, is not over estimated at eight thousand two hundred. The number of stockholders may be safely estimated at three hundred and twenty thousand; and the number of debtors, exclusive of stockholders, at one hundred and fifty thousand. The aggregate of these is near a million of persons, whose business relations and pecuniary interests are directly involved. The capital of all the banks is about $317,636,770; and the amount of their loans about $485,631,867. Here, then, we have a mass of about one million of persons and money and credit to an amount exceeding five hundred millions of dollars, which are, in a great degree, dependent upon the operations of this bank credit system.

Left to be governed by the general laws of trade and credit, these elements of power may continue to be comparatively harmless in their effects upon our political institutions; but what does the Opposition party propose?

It proposes, by the establishment of a National Bank, increase, concentrate, and combine those elements in one corporation. The project is not merely to establish a new Bank, with an immense capital but it is also to give a head and manager to the million of persons and five hundred millions of dollars embraced in the existing Bank system.

When the first Bank of the United States was created, with eleven millions of capital; the number of State banks did not exceed four, and their capital was not over two million five hundred thousand dollars; yet the Republicans of that day dreaded its power. When the second Bank was established with a capital of thirty five millions, the number of State banks did not exceed 134; and their capital was not over $89,822,422. Patriotic fears of its dangerous power were then also entertained. If there was any cause for fear on those occasions, how ought Republicans to feel now, when it is proposed to put one million of individuals, and more than $600,000,000, under the substantial dominion of one corporation? The president of the late Bank of the United States testified, upon a public occasion, that there were few of the State banks which could not have crushed had it been so disposed. The power of the proposed new Bank will be greater, and every new State bank which has been or may be established, will add to its power by increasing the number of its influence.

What, under such a system, is to become of the independence of the several States, and their right and power to regulate and control their own institutions? Will the State banks be governed by the States which created them, or will they look for their superior to the monarch of the great bank credit system, on whom the inexorable and inevitable laws of credit and of trade confer the power to crush or caress them, according to his uncontrollable will?

Every year increases the danger of establishing such an institution, for every year adds to the number of State banks, which must necessarily be its subordinates and dependants. If it ever be established, every bank within the States will, necessarily, become the ally and vassal of this central power. Surely it is enough that the unchangeable laws of credit and trade subject the distant State banks to the influence of one common centre. That consequence is inevitable, and unless trade should be more extensively diffused, must be borne.

But, as the friends of the rights and independence of the States, can we desire to see this subjection made more absolute and degrading by artificial regulations? Least of all, can we desire to see the administration of the laws of credit and trade placed in hands which are not only independent of the State, but of all that is popular in the General Government? When a guarantee can be discovered against the frailties of our nature, mankind may be safe under absolute dominion. When directors of banks can be selected from a superior race, then the existence of a Bank of the United States may be compatible with the rights of the States and the liberty, prosperity, and happiness of the American people.

OXFORD DEMOCRAT.

Paris, July 31, 1838.

Democratic Republican Nomination.

FOR GOVERNOR.

JOHN FAIRFIELD.

Democratic Conventions.

A Democratic Convention for the County of Oxford will be held at the Court House in Paris on WEDNESDAY the EIGHTH day of AUGUST next, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for Senators, and County Treasurer for the ensuing political year.

A Democratic Convention for Oxford Congressional District will be held at the same place at one o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, for the purpose of nominating candidates for Representatives in the next Congress of the United States.

It is requested that each town entitled to a Representative in the State Legislature should send two delegates, one town and plantation will each send one.

By order of the County Committee.

June 11, 1838.

The federal papers at a loss for other matter of objection against Mr. Fairfield are now endeavoring to persuade the people to oppose him on account of his course in relation to the duel. When that fatal tragedy occurred, many of the papers of both parties, feared that they could not be found on the floor of Congress any man possessing moral courage sufficient to demand an investigation of the facts attending that transaction. Some of the federal papers thought that perhaps Mr. Adams might do it, as his age and standing would protect him from the vengeance of those implicated. When Mr. Fairfield moved the investigation he was greeted with the applause of honest men of all parties. Even the political friends of Graves and Wise in the House dared not, with a few exceptions, withstand public sentiment so far as to oppose the demand. They have since so far recovered from their consternation as to attempt to brave out the matter and gloss over it if not justify the deed.

And now the federal party in this State fearing the popularity of Mr. Fairfield, are denouncing him for his course in demanding and effecting an investigation. This is perfectly in character. The services of the implicated in that foul murder are too important to the federal party, for them to permit the deserved punishment of expulsion to be inflicted, and therefore they denounce those who attempt to bring them to justice. A vulgar democrat is guilty of murder he must be hanged; but when a similar offence is committed by federal members of Congress it becomes quite a different affair. So far from their being thought deserving of punishment, the men are to be denounced who dare to demand an investigation of their conduct. The people of this State are called upon by the federal press to oppose Mr. Fairfield for his attempt to bring these federal members to justice. Those who think there is no harm in shooting a democrat, or that if wrong in itself, it becomes venial when committed by federalists, may refuse to vote for Mr. Fairfield on this occasion. But those who are disposed to honor a man who has a courage enough to do his duty regardless of the torments or displeasure of individuals who may be implicated, or a party who may feel aggrieved at the exposure, will esteem Mr. Fairfield as the less on the account of his fearlessness in this effort.

The federal party may test Graves at public dinners and applaud Wise for his conduct, but the freedom of Maine will exonerate and despise the men and the party who justify or applaud them.

"Prescription for opinions sake." The federalists have repeated this cry so long, that parrot like, they utter it even when their recollection must cause a blush in the cheeks of those of the party who retain any regard to consistency. The Kennebec Journal says that a Post Master has been appointed at Watton, "vice Charles Morse, Esq. an old republican who has held the office a great number of years and whose only crime is that he is a whig." We suppose that from the notion of the fact that he has held the office a great number of years, the Journal would have us draw the inference that his claims were thereby strengthened. Doubtless if he had held it to the day of his death, according to the federal creed his son, if he has any, would have been entitled to it as a part of his inheritance. Officers are not yet federalists, nor likely to be until federalism gains the ascendancy throughout the country. Then we may expect that (for fear life will be the shortest and feeblest tenure) how cruel to make a man for opinions sake. Why not imitate the magnanimous example of Gov. Kent, who has so ungenerously avoided anything of the kind? What a shock it must be to the people of this State, that so pernicious an example should be set before them!

We propose this high handed offence will stir up the whole federal party to renewed exertions, to prevent the practice from extending further and stamping with the seal of their reputation so pernicious a doctrine. The federalists never remove a man from office—unless it happens to be a political opponent.

The federal papers assail Mr. Fairfield because he is not an abolitionist. At a federal State Convention of young men held at Utica, N. Y. the meeting was thrown into a state of uproar by the President of the Convention reading a letter requesting that a notice of an abolition meeting might be read. The motion was laid upon the table, and although that motion was reconsidered yet such a tumult ensued upon the attempt to read the notice, that it was withdrawn, before order could be restored. Such were the feelings of the federal Convention in N. Y. on the subject of abolitionism, though it was urged that the abolitionists were their good friends and allies and therefore it was policy to treat them with respect. Such undoubtedly are the feelings of many of the federalists in this State, and yet from motives of policy, they flatter them with sweet speeches and court their alliance. We trust that the abolitionists have intelligence enough to understand the hypocrisy of our opponents, and to know what party are the advocates of freedom and of the rights of the people. We would scorn to solicit their aid by promises of aid or support. Our principles are well known, if they are more congenial to the sentiments by which the abolitionists are actuated, than those of our opponents, we have reason to expect that they will not be deterred from the support of the democratic candidates by the clamors of federalism. But if they are in the market, and will sell themselves to the party that will bid highest and promise fairest, then they belong to our opponents as a matter of right, and we have no wish to interfere in their bargain. We are not the advocates of slavery—we wish that there was not a slave within the limits of our country—but we are not abolitionists as the term is usually understood.

"In peace prepare for war," is a proverb the wisdom of which, experience and observation have confirmed beyond doubt. And I wish to make an application of this wisdom to the present state of affairs. Our democratic friends throughout the County, as the time appointed for our democratic Convention is drawing near, and as it is expected that the different towns will then be well represented, it is hoped that one subject, which, though often alluded to, but too little heralded, will not be overlooked. I refer to party discipline and organization. I am happy to believe that in many towns a complete organization has been already effected, and that party measures have been taken to secure the grand result, which all wish so much to achieve as anticipating. But in many towns this is not the fact. No precautionary steps have been taken, or will be taken unless the importance of the subject is pressed home to them. And it seems to me that the Convention ought to take this matter in hand, and to adopt some system to ensure a full attendance at the polls, and that all necessary preparations may be made for the approaching contest.

No Democrat, I presume, doubts for a moment what the result of the next election will be. We look forward to the elevation of Mr. Fairfield with much confidence, as that the sun will continue to rise from day to day. And no one who watches the signs of the times, and who pays any deference to public sentiment, as gathered from the press, can fail to be cheered and encouraged at the prospect. The republicanism and unanimity with which the nomination has been received, and the spirit which is every where manifested shows that a better solution could not have been made, and that an earnest of a splendid democratic triumph. But however confident of success, and however sanguine in our anticipations, it should not be forgotten that victory is attended with difficulties. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

We often hear it said after election "well, we have done well, but might have done better." May it not be said of us this fall that we have been then measures. For once let us do our best, and show to the world what we might have done last fall.

It should be recollected also that our next vote will be a test of the politics of the State, and that the influence of the next election will not be confined within our own borders. The eyes of neighboring States are upon us. When at our last election we suffered ourselves to be taken by surprise, and federalism had apparently gained the ascendancy, it was made a matter of loss and error, and of federal rejoicing "from Dun to Boston."

"Great Whig Victory," "Maine redeemed," "Democratic bright star,"—in large characters occupy the columns of every whig paper. Federal rejoicing in Maine have ever been too ardent, and it is not to be wondered at that they should make the most of their representative triumph. And though in apparent prosperity now, a high hopes, and flushed a little with success, they will find that democracy is made of sterner stuff than to suffer a republican federal Governor to retain the chair of State more than one year out of seven.

But as our next vote is to be the grand test of parties, we owe it to ourselves, as well as to the cause throughout the land, to make one vigorous effort, and not to be content with a mere majority. Every honorable exertion should be made, and every vote secured. Let us see to it in season that our forces are well organized, that when the time for action shall come, we may present a bold and imposing front, scattering terror and dismay among our opponents, but cheering and confirming the hearts of the friends of liberty and Republicanism throughout the country.

From the Portland Standard.

A Conservative Journal has a labored article to prove that the democratic candidate for Governor, and the other candidates generally, thus far nominated, are supporters of the Independent Treasury. The Republican need be at no pains to establish that point. We cheerfully admit it, so far as we know the views of the candidates nomination; and we not only admit it, but found, upon such clear and acknowledged views on that subject, sound claims to the support of the democratic party. We have always believed the true question before the people to be a national Bank or a separation of the national treasury from all Banks. Entertaining these views we are willing to go to the polls with that question. The one party desire to entrust the public monies to the hands of agents, securely guarded, and responsible to the people, to be kept for the purposes for which it was raised. The other party wish to deposit it in one bank or a league of banks, not responsible, in any but a remote sense, to the people, to be used for the benefit of stockholders, or a limited circle of customers of such institutions. The one party, pursuing the plain requirements of the constitution, ask its deposits with public officers under heavy securities, and not to be used except as appropriated by law—the other party ask, in effect, to levy taxes on the people for the use and benefit of a few. It is after all, perhaps, use of the public monies which operates more strongly with the advocates of the bank system, than any motive of a public nature. It is not its safety—it is not its liability to abuse—but it is because government will not through its revenues, give them pecuniary advantages and a capital, that leads them to labor so strenuously for a return of the revenue to the custody of the Banks.—If this were not the true feeling at bottom, why did they vote during the late session of Congress against the special deposit of it in banks, were the only difference between that system and the late deposit system—was that in the one case the money could be loaned out to the customers of the banks, and in the other, not? Nothing will satisfy them but the use, for their own peculiar and exclusive benefit, of the taxes which the people pay for the support of government. The farmer, the mechanic, and day-laborer pay as much, if not more (vastly more in proportion to members) than those who look to bank facilities as an aid in the pursuit of business. Yet a limited class of the community, stock-holders and customers of the banks—claim it as a right to compel the whole people to pay taxes to be used by them until appropriated by law. What portion of this benefit does the farmer, mechanic, and laborer obtain? None. It all goes to the banks and the customers of the banks. Now, we ask, will the great mass of the people aid the nefarious fraud of such an unjust and unequal system whose whole tendency is to benefit the few at the expense of the many? What points in relation to this great measure were effected at the late session of Congress are thus stated by the Globe.

1. The Committee on Finance of the Senate have been sustained by Congress to the letter in their report upon Mr. Webster's resolution of inquiry. In that report the committee resist the establishment of the bank deposit system of 1836, defend the policy of the gradual exclusion from circulation of bank notes of denominations below five dollars, and recommend the modification of the deposit law of 1836 which is made by the passage of Mr. Wright's bill.

2. The attempt of Mr. Webster and the bank party in that Senate to revive the deposit law of 1836 were wholly defeated.

3. The same attempt by his man Curtis in the House was equally successful.

4. The House of Representatives has declared, by a solemn vote, that the money of the people ought not to, and shall not so far, as the action of that House is concerned, be again surrendered to the banks to be made the foundation for bank loans. In other words, the House of Representatives has voted that a separation, so far, ought to, and shall exist between the public Treasury and the banks.

5. The Senate has, upon this and all other occasions, when the question has been presented to it since the suspension of specie payments by the banks in May, 1837, made the same declaration.

6. These expressions of the Representatives of the people in the two Houses of Congress prove, what we have constantly asserted to be true, that the people of the country demand a separation between Bank and State, at least so far as that the public money shall be in no way connected with the business of banking.

7. They further show that the reason why no law has been passed, or will be, passed, during the present session of Congress, to provide for the safe-keeping and management of the public money, in substantial conformity with the repeated recommendation of the President, is not because there is not a majority of the members of both Houses favorable to the separation, but because there are differences of opinion among the friends of the principle as to the proper details of a bill.

8. They further prove that the great object of the Republicans is the safety of the public money, and its convenient disposition with reference to the public wants and public interest, and that experience has taught them that to surrender it to the uses of banking is destructive of all these objects.

9. The vote of the House against Mr. Curtis's amendment, after the Republican members had so modified it as to deny the use, but not the keeping of the money to the banks, conclusively proves that the sole object of the Bank and Federal party is to give the money of the people to the backs to be used and banked upon, regardless of the safety of the money, the wants of the public Treasury, or the rights of the public creditors.

Such is the issue fairly made up between the two great parties in Congress and in the country. Can there be any doubt upon which side the Republicans will be found.

GREAT TROUBLE AND ALARM IN THE FEDERAL CAMP. Mr. Fairfield's nomination has carried dismay into the ranks of the opposition. Our federal opponents not daring to risk the issue of the gubernatorial election between Mr. Fairfield and Mr. Kent, have concluded to give the latter gentleman a vote-fellow, and carry on the canvass by fiddling upon two strings. It is well known to the public that there are two branches to the opposition party, or more properly three at this moment, viz.—the main division, consisting of Mr. Kent's working friends, including the office-holders and Local-Party Whigs; another, comprising the disappointed and those disgusted with Kent's vacillating policy and ineffectual character; and a third small faction of renegades from all parties, who have not yet exactly determined where to go or what they want, except to defeat the Democracy of the State and of the Union. These two last named factions have determined to unite upon a third candidate for Governor, by the suffrage of Mr. Kent's friends proper, who are well convinced since Mr. Fairfield's nomination, that by a union of the three divisions, Mr. Kent cannot be re-elected. Hence the policy of the federal opposition to have two candidates in order to defeat, if possible the election of Governor by the people, and to exert their full strength upon the Senators and Representatives, in order again to smuggle a federalist into the chair of State, and to impose upon Maine another resolve Governor.

The Eastern Republican, the organ of the two minor Opposition factions, last Tuesday contained a call upon its Democratic Republican Conservative Whig friends, and all the affected men throughout the State, to meet in Bangor on the 19th of July, to sympathize together, to put up a third candidate for Governor, to carry out the separate organization as to Representatives to Congress, State Senators and Representatives, to confer with one another as to the best mode of opposing the National Administration, the election of John Fairfield, and the success of the Democratic party generally.

The notices appear in the Republican with no father or sponsor but the editor, who calls a "State Convention," a "County Convention," and a "District Convention," all on the same day, at the same place, and upon his own responsibility. The modest assurance of the man is equalled only by some of his other well known public and private feats. No man here of common intelligence questions his peculiar ability to revolutionize public opinion both in politics and morals.

The editor with his usual shrewdness and devotion to "conventional morals," says the call is made at the request of many Republicans [Republican Whigs] from various parts of the State. We do not believe half a dozen men calling themselves "Republican," knew that the call was to be made before it was published, and we do not believe a baker's dozen of this description throughout the whole State knew any thing about it; but we do know that some of the bitterest federalists in this city gave information of the notice some days before it appeared in the Republican. O, what a beautiful link in this Democratic Republican Conservative Whig chain is the State Land Office.

In remarks explanatory of the object of the call and the design of those who made it, the editor of the Republican says it is for the purpose of "concentrating votes" to oppose "the destructive measures of the Administration." He says the Conservatives, the saviours of the Whig party, can "throw five thousand votes" that they can secure strength enough in the House to hold the balance of power, and will thus prove a salutary check upon the excesses of the party to which they may choose to yield the assent of the ensuing year. The editor then, and all his followers in different parts of the State, if any he have, are FAIRLY IN THE MARKET TO BE SOLD TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER. This is the idea in the quotation, if it means any thing. But it is doubted even by the editors whether these Democratic Republican Conservative Whigs will remain with him long enough for him to complete the sale, for he says many of them already "are prepared to leave the contending factions" and GO OVER to the main body of the federal party.

No one we are satisfied can at this enlightened day be deceived by this new device of the federal hydra enemy of the Democratic party. The Democrats of this State can beat their federal opponents whether they have one or a dozen gubernatorial candidates, whether they fight in open field or in ambush, and under whatever name or disguise they may assume.

If the Saco Democrat or any of its allies is anxious to make our Boundary Question one of a party character, we are ready for the contest. The sooner such an issue is agreed upon the better for us, and the worse for them?

So says the Portland Advertiser. Altering the most desperate efforts to make our Boundary question one of a party character, the Advertiser, like the thief in the crowd joins lustily in the alarm, and is among the first to cry stop! now that these editors have proved up to the hilt. Does the Advertiser suppose that the people of this State are so very blind as not to know what class of politicians have endeavored to give a party character to the Boundary Question? Does it suppose that the efforts of the federal party in our Legislature—all tending to give a decided party character to this question—are unknown to the people of this State? Is it a matter which has been hidden under a bushel? Has it not rather been proclaimed from every newspaper in the State, in the interest of Gov. Kent and his clique of State office-holders, that all the merit of urging this question upon the attention of Congress and the nation, belongs solely to Gov. Kent and the federal members of the Legislature and the federal member of Congress. All others were forbidden to participate in the honor which was so arrogantly claimed as the exclusive property of a few party leaders, who, after striving hard to get up a party excitement upon a question about which there were no party differences, seek to screen themselves from public indignation, by accusing others of attempting to do the very thing of which the federal leaders have been actually guilty. This is crying "stop" with a vengeance. However, the course of the Advertiser is perfectly "in character" with the conduct of a party which never regards the means used to sustain itself, if the end can only be attained, no matter how desperate the means nor how unjustifiable the end.

We should be pleased to know, how the Advertiser can make it appear that when such an issue is agreed upon, the better for us? The Advertiser and its allies have tried this issue once, and it has proved rather the worse for wear. Let them beware how they tamper with the subject for the future.—Saco Democrat.

A New Cry.—The Tory-Whigs are never at a loss for new expedients when old ones become stale and unprofitable. Hence, the tenacity with which they adhere to the maxim of J. Q. Adams.

"For if we cannot alter things By George we'll change their names!"

Once the cry, of office holders, was the war-cry the rallying-shout of the party, and the interference of office holders in elections, was denounced as an act of treason. But the tables have turned. The open, palpable and undisguised interference of Gov. Kent's train band of newly appointed office holders, and their desperate efforts to perpetuate the federal ascendancy in this State—have induced leaders to change their notes, and, instead of the old shouting about office holders, we have the new cry of ex-offices holders! Upon the heads of the individuals, the seven vials of the double distilled wrath of Tory Whiggery will be poured out in copious effusions. Office holders—especially Gov. Kent's—are regarded with considerable complacency. They are permitted to participate in tory whig conventions, and make speeches without molestation. But an ex-office holder is looked upon with the same degree of horror with which the same party, in the days of their simplicity, used to regard the dear office holders, whom they have taken to their embraces. Such is the accommodating nature of tory whiggery—denouncing today the same class of men whom they honored yesterday—and changing their principles as easily and readily as they change their name.

Saco Democrat.

A vote was taken upon the use of the public money by the Banks, in the House of Representatives just previous to the adjournment which served to dishearten the federalists, and infuse new spirits into the Democratic ranks.

When Mr. Curtis's bill was under discussion, respecting the disposition of the public money, Mr. Parris, of this State, moved to amend the bill so that nothing contained in the act shall be construed so as to authorize the use of the public money for banking purposes. The question was put, and the result was, yeas 101, nays 101. The speaker voted in the affirmative, and the amendment was adopted. Twenty-five members were absent, who were known to be favorable to the principles of the amendment; so that if the House had been full there would have been a decided majority in favor of the divorce of bank and State, a principle for which the Democratic party and the Administration are earnestly contending, although there may be some difference of opinion with regard to the best means by which this is to be effected.

This decided expression of the opinion of the House upon a subject of such vital interest to the country, must be extremely gratifying to the democratic party, while it will serve to convince our opponents that the principle for which we are contending will be preserved in and maintained until it becomes the settled policy of the government.—Saco Democrat.

Silver Change.—An important bill to increase the quantity of silver change has passed the Senate; it is a bill to authorize the branch mints in Georgia and North Carolina to coin silver change of the denominations of twenty five cents, ten cents, and five cents. These branches were intended to coin gold only, but it is found that the same machinery which will strike half eagles and quarter eagles will also strike the smaller pieces of silver, and that no additional expense will be incurred by this extension. It is a measure of great moment to increase the quantity of silver change in the country. It is necessary to the convenience of the people, and to the suppression of shill-plasters, and will prevent future pretenses for shill-plasters, as small silver is never exported.

ERA OF GOOD FEELING.—Gov. Mayes, the members of the New York Senate, the Mayor of the city of New York, the Recorder and both boards of the Common Council partook of a sumptuous dinner on Senate Island last Wednesday. The New Era says that Whigs toasted Democrats and Democrats toasted Whigs—that party politics being altogether excluded, the assembly of legislators, magistrates, and distinguished citizens, presented a gratifying scene of social cordiality and enjoyment—and when the steamboat left the wharf the Governor was greeted with reiterated cheers. This is right. There is a time for all things. Each in his proper place, say we. He who refuses to cultivate good social feeling with his neighbor because he may differ from him in opinion about religion or politics, is a small animal.

The Whiggery say that Faneuil Hall will not be large enough for the Webster dinner, and propose going upon the Common. The Committee will decide the question to-day. N. B. In reply to numerous enquiries from different members of the Committee we say, once for all, that we cannot attend the dinner—we suppose that Mr. Webster will be greatly disappointed, but "previous engagements" will positively prevent us from taking a lunch with him on the 24th. The committee will please to accept our thanks for the very polite manner in which their invitation was communicated, and offer to the company, on our behalf, this sentiment:—

THE MECHANICS OF BOSTON.—They know well how to use tools to be made fools of.—Boston Statesman.

The N. Y. Sun thinks it isn't polite for a lady to knock a gentleman down. Shouldn't a gentleman bow before the ladies?

BE IT REMEMBERED
By every Mechanic and Laboring Man
That the Federalists are in favor of making bank paper the acknowledged currency of the country.

That they want to force the Government to take the notes of every bank in the United States, when there is scarcely a bank note in the country that will pass current one hundred miles from the place where issued.

That they conspired with the Bank of England to produce distress.

That they have determined to make the people suffer, because they are Democrats, and because they support democratic men.

That they have declared "Free suffrage to be a curse to any people."

That they refused to grant aid to the Government, at the time of extreme emergency.

And that they have boldly declared "the single end and aim of the Federal party is to get into power."

Let the people remember these things.—Keep them continually before you. They contain sentiments that should never be tolerated in a republican government.

Correspondence of the Boston Morning Post, PITSFIELD, July 17, 1838.

MY DEAR SIR.—The citizens of this town and vicinity, have just witnessed one of the most terrific disasters that ever befell them. In the dead hour of night, when the entire population were fast asleep, and a perfect stillness pervaded the whole neighborhood, everybody was instantaneously aroused by one of the most terrible and terrific noises that ever fell upon the human ear. Men, women and children started from the beds, and in a state of nakedness ran into the streets, shrieking and screaming in the most frightful manner. Night was truly hideous. On seeking for the cause of this great alarm, it was ascertained that the powder magazine situated in the burial place in the centre of the village had blown up, and scattered desolation throughout its vicinity. The magazine contained nearly a thousand pounds of powder, and had been fired by some daring and desperate "Scoundrels prowling at the midnight hour."

It would be almost impossible for me to detail the injuries that the property surrounding the spot has sustained. All the buildings within a hundred rods were more or less injured—roofs broken in—walls started several inches—out-houses prostrated—and the glass shaken from the windows, not only of the dwelling houses, hotels and stores, but of the churches and other public institutions. Incredible as it may seem, it is nevertheless true, that immense pieces of rock weighing from three to four hundred pounds were lifted by the explosion and sent off a distance of ten or fifteen rods. The printing office of the Sun was very much injured, as also the Museum which is said to have contained the rarest collection of curiosities in the country.

You cannot imagine the consternation that prevailed here through that fatal night—and it would be useless for me to attempt a description of the half-hour that followed the moment of explosion. Of the report you may be able to judge from fact, that it was distinctly heard for fifteen miles, and was supposed to be an earthquake. The place looks gloomy. The damage has been estimated at a sum not less than five or six thousand dollars, which I think is far below the mark.

It is most singular that amid all this wreck and ruin, not one life was lost. Had it occurred in the day-time, hundreds would probably have fallen.

There was an examination of some boys yesterday, suspected of the incendiaryism, but I believe nothing positive was proved. Every effort is being made to bring the scoundrels who caused this terrific disaster to the throne of justice. Yours, in haste, J. J.

Robbery.—As a Mr. Young, formerly a Deputy Sheriff for the County of Oxford, was coming into the city last evening, and while on the Eastern Bridge, he was seized, robbed of about $600, and thrown over the Bridge. He succeeded in reaching the shore. We have not learned how much the man was personally injured, or other particulars. Argus.

New Orleans July 12.—President Houston was informed by a passenger arrived last evening in the Columbia, from Galveston, had left for the east, on a visit to the numerous Indian tribes who reside on the frontiers of the republic, for the purpose of forming treaties of amity and peace with them. He will, it is said be absent three months.—Courier.

Huronford, July 9th, 1838.

The Democratic Republicans of East Huronford met in the town of Wednesday, July 4th, at the house of J. B. Leach, near Huron Falls. After partaking of a repast served up by the host in good style, the club was removed and the following toast was drunk:—

1st. The day we celebrate—Never, never will the sons of America cease to rejoice at its annual return, so long as they are united among the nations of the earth.

2d. Federalists under the name of Whigs, like a negro wearing a white dress.

3d. Tories of '36, Federalists, Hartford Convention men, Federal Republicans, National Republicans, Whigs of '38.

A succession of aristocratic knaves without a change of principles.

4th. Virgil B. Harris—The people's man, and a man for the people.

5th. Oxford Democrat—It labors to sustain the interest of the people, and the people ought to sustain the interest of the Democrat.

6th. Hon. T. J. Carter, descendant—Long may his virtues, and patriotism, and his devotedness in the cause of democracy be remembered and prize itself by the Democrats of Oxford.

7th. Andrew Jackson—May his retirement be as peaceful as the life he has been glorious.

8th. John Fairfield—The defender of the rights of the people in the halls of Congress, in defiance of the threats of the aristocracy—By his firm adherence to democratic measures, and the rights of the people, he has merited their approbation, and will have the support of a majority of the citizens of Maine at coming election.

11th. The surviving Soldiers of the Revolution—Alas! the relics of former patriotism and virtue.

12th. The Spirit of '38—By looking at it as at Moscow, Bazaar, it will cure the bite of this little reptile called the Voice of the People.

13th. Martin Van Buren—An able Magistrate, a wise Counselor, an honest man.

VOLUNTEERS.
By A. Rolster, President of the day. Honest politicians for office and station of public trust, literature, talent and virtue are safe pillars on which to sustain a free, equal republican government.—The more virtue the safer the government.

By the same. Democracy of Maine—May they not be swayed up by first party reptile called the voice of the people, nor thrown into remembrance by its serpentine hiss; but show by reports from the ballot boxes the coming September election that their principles shall be sustained, and John Fairfield will be elected Governor of the State of Maine the coming year.

By D. Knapp, Esq. Edward Kent's Administration—Doomed to be executed on the Gallows of Public Opinion, its body enclosed in the Coffin of Disgrace, and buried deep in the grave of infamy beneath the productive soil of a Fair-field.

By Albert Gilman. The Abolition of Slavery—Firm in their moral sentiment—unswerving democrats—May they be as charitable towards the cause of equal rights and liberties as they are towards the fair ones of our land.

By A. Wheeler, V. President. N. Bidell, with his purse in his right hand and his influence in his left, his right hand will be brought to light, and he will have his hand with those who perish without mercy and have their part with those who prefer the dishonest deed to the honest.

By the same. Whiggery, like the ancient Jews fighting for the flesh-pots of Egypt who desired a groveling life—May democracy raise a standard of honesty, equality and economy, which, like Moses' serpent in the wilderness, shall bring to light the hidden misery of inquiry which beclouds our political horizon.

By James H. Farman. Federalists under Whig colors: Judas in stolen feathers.—The people will strip them of their borrowed plumage at our coming election.

By D. C. Abbott. The young men of Huronford—True to their political integrity—cheerful lovers of Democracy—May they not forget their duty at the ballot boxes the coming election, nor let the fountains of the political conquest keep them from twice to their country.

By D. H. Farman. Edward Kent's Administration—May it live to the enormous age of eleven months and a half and no longer.

By Deji. Allen. The Maudsley Gilly—May he always be kept in remembrance by the citizens of Maine.

By D. Knapp. J. B. Leach, our host—May his heart be as free from guile as his head is from hair.

By Capt. D. H. Farman. American Ships and Ladies—May the first be well rigged and the latter well manned.

By J. B. Leach. May the sentiments offered at this table be held in remembrance as long as the water continues to run over the rocks of Huron Falls.
